As punishment for his sins Brook is sent down to the cold, dark basement and set to work on cold cases. His superiors feel burying Brook in cold cases will further punish the just returning from suspension policeman. It's absolutely brilliant and kept me spellbound. The story bounces around a fair deal and there are numerous characters but I tend to enjoy this kind of intricate plotting. I think this story finally demonstrates the coming of age of Steven Dunne as an accomplished novelist, an author at ease with his craft. His character building is impeccable and thorough. As he investigates it becomes clear that there is more to the case than meets the eye.
