The question, then, is not whether to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon, but. Iran's nuclear program has been touted as a danger to the world by American politicians and other international leaders, including Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.

So this deal is not just the best choice among alternatives--this is the strongest. But he rejected the prevailing attitude among some foreign policy circles that equated security with a perpetual war footing. So in that sense, the critics are right: Set up a giveaway.

We cannot dictate the foreign, economic and energy policies of every major power. The young President offered a different vision.
