Drug companies cry poor, yet they charge exorbitant prices for their products would have given this 5 stars had I read it when it was published way back in So some of the drugs we rely on that cost a fortune were actually discovered by universities, who now earn a profit from them, that were funded by our tax dollars 3 America is the only country in the world that doesn't fix prices, meaning that drugs are vastly more expensive here than anywhere else in the world 4 The logical solution to the above would be to import drugs from other countries but that's illegal 5 Clinical trials aren't as rigorous as one would think and new drug releases are questionable in their safety as a consequence 6 the pharmaceutical lobby is the largest in the country and at the time of the book's writing, the top ten companies on the Fortune were pharma organizations.
