The exact relevance of this has been questioned by some experts, but it is true Cats of Europe this century gave rise to the beginning of a difficult era for cats. Around 12 to 14, years back, the cave lions were completely exterminated from the UK. They did not manage to make it back into the northern parts of the continent however, for reasons we may never know. AllarticleswithunsourcedstatementsArticleswithunsourcedstatements Over the years, the wildcat population has been drastically falling in the European countries where they are. Adaptable and widely distributed animals, their ability to persist may have been down to raw strength and tenaciousness.
