In this paper, I consider how artists with disabilities are currently using performance, particularly public space interventionalist performance, to reengage, reenact and reenvisage discourses of personal, economic, environmental or other forms of disaster, and the need for austerity in light of such disasters or crises. The thread between the points is submerged in thin epidermis, tracing a path, but from here to where? In the past few decades, artists, activists and scholars have tried to avoid describing the experience of the disabled body in terms of disaster.
