Sobieski insisted that he should not have to pay for his march to Vienna, since it was by his efforts that the city had been saved; nor could the Viennese neglect the other German troops who had marched. Siege operations started on 17 July. The battle is noted for including the largest known cavalry charge in history. The forces in the city of Vienna responded by sending a Polish-Ukrainian former Zaporozhian Cossack and trader who was fluent in Turkish by the name of Jerzy Franciszek Kulczycki in a successful spy mission to penetrate the Turkish forces and notify the relief troops of when the joint attack was to be. Capturing the city of Vienna had long been a strategic aspiration of the Ottoman Empire, because of its interlocking control over Danubian Black Sea to Western Europe southern Europe and the overland Eastern Mediterranean to Germany trade routes. Uncommon Groundsp. There is doubt as to how much the Tatars participated in the final battle before Ottoman commanders had intended to take Vienna before Sobieski arrived, but time ran .
