Their marriages involved crossing over what sociologist Richard Alba calls Most of these women are passionately committed to raising Jewish children, fully cooperating in the Jewish education of their children, and are learning as much as they can about the Jewish faith and culture. McGinity integrates her findings with an impressive command of the social and historical research on inter-marriage, making this book an important analysis of this thorny issue. If there was any analysis of the phenomenon, it took the form of blaming Jewish women for the out-marriage of Jewish men.

In the Council of Jewish Federations National Jewish Population Survey NJPS rate remained very low from through after which it increased sharply. The municipality of Petah Tikva has also announced an initiative to prevent interfaith relationships, providing a telephone hotline for friends and family to "inform" on Jewish girls who date Arab men as well as psychologists to provide counselling.
