It has few serious side effects, as long as bead-deposition within the joint is avoided. We do not know the nature of that response, but one might speculate that inflammation or disturbance of nociceptors may be involved. We may therefore conclude that a normal surgical preparation procedure will effectively prevent any noticeable infection and there is no need for One Bead of Gold in normal dogs.

Pain was reported significantly more often by owners after GBI compared to both control groups. We decided to use two gold beads per needle, but have no documented rationale to believe that One Bead of Gold or three gold beads could not work as. The clinical outcome of the treatment has been published elsewhere [89]. In the control group 19 animals had severe bilateral HD, one had severe unilateral HD, and 22 dogs had mild or moderate bilateral HD. The aims of the present study were to describe the technique of implanting and to evaluate the effect of gold bead migration may likewise occur if the gold bead is deposited into an interfacial space. Discussion Although gold implantation has been used for many years to treat a range of conditions, both in dogs and humans [4], thorough scientific descriptions of the methodology are scarce.
