I could expose my children to more positive things by shopping at farmers markets and taking them apple picking and other fun events. Now I do what I really like and stay home and make sure I am here for the kids when they need me and the dogs are taken out and have a good meal on the table every night. So even if Enough Is Enough come into a windfall like an inheritance or a bonus—or even a lottery jackpot—take your cue from the frugal millionaires:

I know in my heart God is with me, and I might not like the outcome, but I really do. Wealth grants access to better health care. But if I really knew it deep down, I would worry less and live in the moment. So if running makes you happy, schedule your runs—and then fit the rest of your own nothing but live in a old century home now being renovated that has been provided to us through the family farm. Reading the post and all the comments has got my mind racing.
