All that being said, those who show interest in surgery or learning about surgery, will have the opportunity to minor things in the O. Asking a question at an inopportune time in the OR may distract the surgeon at a critical point in the procedure that he or she is performing. You will need to be familiar with your patient's overnight course, vitals, labs.

If you draw attention to yourself on rounds for anything but contributing to the team, you are not doing your job. Also, learn how to gown and glove. Pay close attention to the innumerable butt pus cases, as you may get to do one all on your own make the incision, wash out the pus, pack.

Plan to arrive at a decent hour and spend almost the entire day seeing a wide variety of patients. You will be responsible for presenting patients that you saw in the OR.
