Member feedback about 16th century: He was the first modern explorer of the coasts of the Northeast of Northern America including the large Labrador peninsula which was named for him by European settlers in eastern Canada. João Fernandes (Portuguese Edition) is possible that in he reached what we know as Greenland, and called it Terra do Lavrador. Many of the non-aboriginal population in Labrador did not permanently settle. He ran aground on João Fernandes (Portuguese Edition) northern part of Hispaniola on 5 December which the Taino people had inhabited since the 7th century; the site became the first permanent European settlement in the Americas. The number of Portuguese place names that survive to this day, and the evidence of Portuguese maps, suggests that their presence was significant, but probably not as important as historians have traditionally suggested.
